UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA SYSTEM

Except for UC Riverside, most University of California teaching credential programs are at the graduate level. Thus, students must first complete a baccalaureate degree and then apply to a UC graduate school, at which point they can earn a Master of Arts degree and complete requirements for the Multiple Subject Teaching Credential. Graduate school admission requirements typically include passage of the California Basic Educational Skills Test (CBEST), demonstration of subject matter competence by passing the California Subject Exam for Teachers (CSET) Multiple Subject Exam, and a GPA of 3.0 or higher. Some programs also require that applicants take the GRE (Graduate Record Examination). With regard to coursework, students should choose their electives wisely to increase their knowledge of the areas included in the California Content Standards (e.g., math, language arts, social studies, humanities/fine arts, science, and social studies). Recommended majors: any.

Note: UCLA now offers a major in Education and Social Transformation. Students are admitted as pre-majors and may apply for the major their first semester. The admitting GPA is 3.2. No major prep is required but students should complete the IGETC general education pattern.
